City councillors are discussing informally the need of additional help at the fire station, and while no official action has been taken in the matter, there is a probability that an extra man will soon be assigned to regular duty at the fire station. In the call squad, the quota of available firemen is still large, as a recent bill of some $600 for call men's services amply indicates; but recently the aldermanic fire committee has concluded that another permanent man must be added to the force if the department is to maintain its reputation for efficiency. One of the aldermen is authority for the statement that a man will be added sometime late in the summer or early fall. A still alarm last night found the operator of the auto truck in a predicament where he had to go to the fire with no more assistance than that which a young boy, who boarded the car, might extend in an emergency.

Henry H. Hodgdon, district foreman for the Vermont Telephone & Telegraph Co., has come into possession of a remarkable gun that was manufactured by a New Hampshire man some years before the double-barreled gun in use to-day was ever contemplated. As a matter of fact the firearm is a home-made affair, but anyone who takes the pains to examine carefully the workmanship will scarcely guess that it is the handiwork of an amateur gunsmith. The following piece dates back more than 55 years and it owes its peculiar appearance to the fact that one barrel rode on top of the other, while either side of the stock may be brought against the shoulder. The owner of the weapon recently died in Lancaster, N. H., and it was his wish that the antique be forwarded to Mr. Hodgdon. Friends of the foreman are going to hold him to a promise that he will fire both barrels of the gun in rapid succession.
